In Ontario, persons performing operational duties in a drinking water or wastewater facility are required to hold or be deemed to hold a valid certificate and/or licence for the type of system in which they perform their duties (i.e. water treatment subsystem, wastewater collection facility, etc.). People wishing to become an operator must first obtain an Operator-in-Training certificate and/or licence which allow new operators to gain the one year of valid operating experience that is required to become a class I operator.
